Winterludes

As a child, the winter holidays resonated with me in a profound way. It wasn't just the presents, family and friends, or even the religious nature of Christmas in our house. It was the crisp weather, the bare trees, the promise of spring, and a sense of belief that everyone seemed to have. It was inevitable that this growing musician would develop a connection between the celebrations and the music created for them.

As an adult, I traded religious rituals for spiritual practices, but the music of winter stayed with me, and every holiday season I feel the call to go within. The year 2020 gave many artists an opportunity for extended introspection, and it was then — with spring and summer weather outside, with people masking and social distancing and staying home — that these arrangements were written. The result is music that is not only introspective, but also jubilant and fun.

I hope you enjoy these arrangements and that your winter is a bit warmer for listening.
